South Korea Passes Law Banning Mobile Phone Use in Schools from March 2026

South Korea has passed a bill that bans the use of mobile phones and smart devices during class hours in schools, with the law set to take effect in March 2026.

The legislation, a bi-partisan initiative, aims to address smartphone addiction, which research indicates has a negative impact on academic performance.

The bill was approved by 115 votes out of 163 in the country's parliament.

While most schools in South Korea already have some form of a phone ban, this new law makes the country one of the few to legally enshrine such a ban.

Similar bans exist in countries such as France, Finland, Italy, Netherlands, and China, although they are often limited to younger children or specific schools.

A 2024 government survey found that 43% of South Koreans aged 10-19 are excessively dependent on smartphones, which is nearly double the 25% of the overall population.
